FULL-TIME RESEARCH AND TEACHING POSITION IN LAW

Job description

The Perelman Centre for Legal Philosophy is recruiting two full-time assistants in global law, comparative law, legal theory or human rights.

Each mandate includes research assignments, teaching assignments and assignments related to the logistics of the Centre.

As part of his/her teaching assignments, the candidate will during their mandate deliver tutorials to 5 groups of students, each 24 h/a. In 2020-2021, the tutorials relate to the courses:

- 'Introduction au droit' (Profs Benoît Frydman and Isabelle Rorive);
- Possibly, another course contingent on the applicant's profile, such as 'Comparative Law' (Prof. Isabelle Rorive).

Each research assistant will have to assume their part of logistical and administrative tasks inherent to the life of a university research center.

Research assignment consists in writing and finishing a doctoral thesis by the end of the mandate.

Their research subject will fall within one of the Perelman Centre's three areas of research: global law and SMART law, comparative law and comparative human rights law, or history of ideas, interpretation and legal argumentation.

The description of the research areas of the Centre and related publications are available online at: <http://www.philodroit.be>.

Each research assistant is first appointed for a two-year term, renewable (subject to approval by competent bodies) for two additional two-year terms of full-time work (6 years in total). As the primary goal of the position is to complete a doctoral thesis, work will be equally split between teaching and research activities. The assistants' list of duties may be regularly reviewed.
